To Kitty-Pig and Bear.

You made this possible.

Little Henry was running, running with fright. Chased down by zombies who were stalking the night. He was tired, so tired, his energy long past. “I’ve got to find a hiding place,” he said with a gasp.

Looking around, his mind all a jumble, he needed to escape zombie tummy grumbles. He caught sight of something that gave him a shudder – a creepy old house with just one open shutter.

“What choice do I have?” he said with a soft groan. “I’ve got to hide before the street’s a dead zone.” He climbed in the window, into what he did not know, hoping against hope to find a place he could lie low.
